

Memorandum of Understanding Between
Mobile Computing Promotion Consortium (MCPC) and Portable Computer and Communications Association (PCCA)

The MCPC in Japan and the PCCA in the US are industry organizations that promote mobile computing and communications, and standardize related technology.

The MCPC and PCCA are working to establish and promote mobile computing and communication standards, and to provide future computing and communication technologies that use wireless communications for applications that span a broad range of platforms and devices.

The MCPC and PCCA agree to the following objectives to obtain synergistic effects:

- (a) Both organizations will cooperate and collaborate with each other to promote mobile computing and communications for the growth of the global market.
- (b) Both organizations will cooperate and collaborate with each other to establish mobile computing and communication standards that use wireless communication technologies.
- (c) Both organizations agree to exchange information on mobile computing and communications associated with promotion and standardization.
- (d) Both organizations authorize each other to reproduce free of charge each other materials including specifications required for promotion and standardization. However, these rights do not include ownership rights of the incorporated materials.
- (e) Both organizations agree to follow the intellectual property policy of the other organization for specifications incorporated by the other organization.
- (f) Both organizations agree to make available their intellectual property policy.
- (g) After one organization releases new specifications, the other organization agrees to update its released materials that incorporates specifications from that organization at appropriate times to maintain compatibility of both organizations' specifications.
